Foreign Secretary Reviews Cruiser Patrol.

LONDON, Oct. 18 .- Lord Charles Bereaford, in the House of Lords yesterday, qustioned the consistency of the Government of the United States in objecting earlier in the war to British cruisers patrolling the American coast and yet allowing the German commerce ler U-53 to enter and leave Newport and operate offensively only a short distance away.

Earl Grey was asked whether it was true that the commander of the U-53 requested United States vessels of war to clear out of the way in order to facilitate the sinking of defenseless

Viscount Grey, the secretary of state for foreign affairs, said in reply to Lord

Beresford's question: "The best thing I can do is to read a summary of what actually passed between the United States Government and his majesty's government on this subject since the war began and what we understand the view of the United States Government to be."

Intercepted Warship's Wireless. Viscount Grey then read the following

Viscount Grey then read the following statement:

"On the 14th of September, 1914, the British ambassador at Washington telegraphed that the United States authorities had intercepted wireless communications from H. M. S. Suffolk to New York, asking for supplies and newspapers, and he informed us that the United States Government considered that this would be making use of United States territory as a base for supplies and information as to shipping movements through the newspapers.

"The proceeding was, so far as I am aware, not repeated, and no official protest was received, so far as I have been able to discover in the foreign office.

"On the 5th of October, 1914, we had a private communication respecting the presence of British ships near New York harbor. We had unofficial communication later on deprecating the same and saying that in the past such hovering of foreign vessels in the vicinity of the great ports of the United States had forced that Government, owing to the public feeling aroused, to take a very strong line, and that if the practice continued it might be construed into an act of unfriendliness requiring some action on the part of the United States Government.

"Shadowing" Complained Of.

"There was later on an official complaint, on the 16th of December. DIS; founded on the shadowing by a British warship for some distance along the American coast, though from a position admittedly beyond the territorial limits, of a vessel named the Vinland, and this com-named the Vinland, and this complaint referred to the seriousness with which the United States Government regarded the hovering of belligerent warships about American ports and coasts.

"The official complaint stated: That the British government was aware that the United States Government had always regarded the practice of belligerent cruisers patrolling the American coast in close proximity to the territorial waters of the United States, and making the neighboring waters a station for their observations, as inconsistent with the treatment to be expected from the naval vessels of a friendly power in time of war, and had power in time of war, and had maintained that the consequent menace of such proceeding to the freedom of American commerce was vexatious and uncourteous to the United States.

"Although vessels of either belligerents may not actually take shelter within the jurisdiction of the United States and proceed thence against vessels of the enemy, this Government would regard as an unfriendly act the hovering of such vessels off the coast with inteint to intercept vessels of trade of the enemy."

At present it will be impossible to appoint a practical printer as instruc-tor in the high schools as urged by the Columbia Typographical Union, Super-intendent of Schools Thursten said to-

"I fully believe in the adoption of printing in the public schools," 'said Mr. Thurston, 'but at this time it is impossible to appoint a printer to a permanent position. Vocational training will some day receive the place in the schools that it deserves."

ganized about a year ago among the market of the tomatoes. Then costs of production, etc., and the market price of tomatoes in Baitimore was raised to arrive at a fair price to the farmer. The Baitimore market had never been cuitivated to any great extent. But by grading their product the Dorchester county farmers were able to hold a constant threat to take their best tomatoes to Baitimore instead of the canneries.

This brought the canneries to book, with the result that the farmer received a better price for his tomatoes and he gave the canners better service, with the result that the farmer received a better price for his tomatoes at the same time building up a market for any excess or for the especially fine grades outside the canneries.

This worked out for the benefit of the consumer by giving him better tomatoes, or more value for his money, and also kept the Haltimore market price down through the new sources of supply.

With the establishment of a price,
the discontinuance of sending out berries on consignment to commission merchants, the farmer received more money and the price to the consumer was lowered by a lessening of the overhead charges. Then last year there came a drought in the berry district.
The strawberries were of a poorer quality. The farmers had become very proud of the high standards they had raised and when the time came to seli

Mr. Knapp has been in charge of the work of organizing all kinds of community effort toward bettering farming and dalrying conditions through the South, and has been particularly interested in the smaller groups rather than the big organizations. In connection with this work he has found in one or two sections the necessity of securing a closer interest by the consumer in the marketing of his product.

In connection with the milk supply particularly, Mr. Knapp has become convinced that local conditions made it imperative for the consumers themselves to take part of the burden of the overhead expenses of distribution.

It has been found by the milk producers in all sections of the country that practically the heaviest item in the journey of milk from the cow to breakfast food lay in the distribution system. Milk that costs 18 cents per gallon to produce cannot be marketed for less than 24 to 26 cents per gallon, according to the locality in which the distribution employed. And this figure leaves no margain of safety for excess milk over the demands of the consumer, or interest on the investment of the distribution or profit.

Suggested Improvement.

In Greenvillé, S. C., Mr. Knapp found such conditions prevailing, and he suggested that the consumers be asked to ear some of the burden of expense. This was regarded by the consumers as a rather bold move, as they pointed out they were already bearing the burden of expense. Mr. Knapp's scheme was to have the consumers, through the bankeers and men with extra capital in the town, to organize a distributing company. Each of those entering the company. Each of those entering the company would invest a certain amount, agreeing that they would take only 6 per cent interest on their investment.

With the funds thus secured a creamery was built to take up the excess production and a distribution system provided. The scheme has worked so well that it's fame spread, and now there are three places in South Carolina where the consumers are helping out the fact that some of the berry dustrict. The strawberries were of a poorer quality. The farmers had become very provided. The scheme has worked so well that it's fame spread, and now there are three places in South Carolina where the consumers are helping out with the distribution and creamery problems.

It is pointed out by Mr. Knapp that there is no loss to anyone. The farmer is getting better prices for his product the consumer is getting his milk and butter at a reduced cost and at the ame time, the money that is invested in the reamery and distributing center is getting better prices for his product the consumer is getting his milk and butter at a reduced cost and at the ame time, the money that is invested in the scheme has also been put into effect in at least one packing house project in South Carolina for the purpose of bringing a higher price for meat to This was regarded by the consumers as rather bold move, as they pointed out

The building up of a system of community responsibility, and standardizamunity responsibility, and standardisation of product is becoming one of the big things in the work of the Department of Agriculture, according to the experts. During the past two or three years the work of the division of markets in promoting co-operative buying and selling and the extension work through county agents has resulted in the establishment of thousands of agricultural associations and corporations from gigantic concerns taking in a group of counties such as the Virginia Produce the canneries. None of the farmers had any sort of a price agreement with the canneries, and the canners paid them what the farmers' necessities demanded. That is, the canners paid as little as they could.

And the farmer with poor tomatoes who didn't particularly need the money could hold his own crop—while it grow poorer in quality—and demand a big price, while the farmer with the good, firm tomaties, who needed the money, was forced to sell at a low price. When there was any indisposition on the part of the Dorchester county farmers to sell or the crop was poor, the canneries went into Delawarc, paid a higher price than they gave the farmers at home, and shipped tomatoes to their canneries.

The situation demanded action, and the Tomato Growers' Association was organized. A business manager was appointed who mapped out a plan for the grading and extension of the market of the tomatoes. Then costs of production, etc., and the market price of tomatoes in Baitimore was raised to

Mrs. Hardie Reinstated By Order of President

By executive order, Mrs. Vera Hardie has been reinstated in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving as printer's assistant. Mrs. Mardie entered the service November 1, 1913, and continued there until her marriage. April 2, 1915.

Some time ago her husband was taken ill, and is now an invalid, while she has a dependent child. President Wilson issued an executive order reinstating her in her position without regard to length of severance from the service.

Bureau of Standards Suggests Measure for Protection of Ultimate Consumer.

The pure food law idea may be applied to gasolene. Thus, it will be possible, according to the Bureau of Standards, for the ultimate consumer to secure the protection from inferior products which are now imposed on
